The information below provides a quick overview of the jobs market for 2009. This information, and the listing of current job openings in the St. Louis Metro area (as of June 2009) will help you in your job search.

Perhaps the most important consideration is what is the job seeker looking to achieve. A short term employment situation is radically different from a career, although one could certainly lead to the other. A common thread that connects them both is the need to have your contribution add value to your employer. This means that you have to do more than just “put in the time.” And whatever the position, you will find that high performance selling is critical to your success – whether convincing others of your capabilities, or selling the company’s products and services.
